

CHARLES STREET (2104)

Baltimore

The three-story brick house on this site was built in 1888 for William Schnauffer [(1835-1889)] the publisher of the Baltimore Wecker* and long the agent of the North German Lloyd in Baltimore. After his death, his widow, Mrs. Elise [Franz] Schnauffer [(1834-1895)], remained in the house, and continued to publish the staunchly Republican German weekly until her own death.*

* Her heirs sold the paper to Chas. H. Miltner in 1897.

From 1897 through 1917

(Continued next card)

CHARLES STREET (2104)

(Card 2)

Baltimore

the house was the home of Charles H. Brown, Jr. [(1853-)], an executive of the Baker-Whiteley Coal and Miller Safe Companies. By 1920 the Browns had been succeeded by advertising and insurance agent Alan L. Jemison [(1883-)]; he lived there until his death, after which the house was apparently converted to the purely commercial uses it retains today [2012]

'Mr. William Schnauffer's new dwelling' [in] Baltimore Sun, July 18, 1888, page 4, column E. [Description of Charles Street building]